Tuned by Charlie to generational insight

WHEN the children grow up, 3am early rises are supposed to stop for bleary-eyed mums and dads.

But for Mt Waverley couple Scott and Sarah Butler, the birth of their first child was only the start of many early rises to come.

When newborn son Charlie came into their world, the couple started to reject the presence of chemicals and pesticides used on most everyday fruit and veg at supermarkets.

They were instead inspired by organic produce and its benefits and started a business, Organic Angels, to home-deliver organic produce three times a week.

The Butlers now both rise at 3am on delivery days to buy fruit and vegetables from the markets to then deliver to homes and offices across Melbourne.

Their dedication to the environment has also seen them modify their business to save energy and reduce waste, along the way earning them a nod for a statewide industry award for environmental sustainability through VECCI's Grow Me The Money program.

"Sarah and I are very environmentally conscious in our personal lives, and we wanted to bring that into our business, too," Mr Butler said.

"We want to make sure the world we live in is looked after for the next generation."

being recycled, and old fruit and vegetables are made into compost.

Mr Butler said he discovered the program after looking for ways to bring his environmental ideals into his business.
